

THE WHITE HOUSE

September 1, 2006

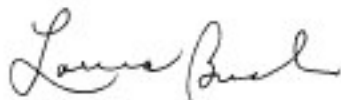

Dear Friends,

During National Gynecologic Cancer Month, I am pleased to join patients and their families, physicians, nurses and researchers throughout the country in encouraging increased awareness of the need for early detection and treatment of these diseases.

I applaud the Gynecologic Cancer Foundation for your efforts against these cancers, as well as your designation of a month each year during which women are offered special opportunities for screening and education. And I salute every woman who takes advantage of these opportunities.

Gynecologic cancer can strike women of any age. If you are a woman or someone who loves a woman, September is the time to act on all those good resolutions to request a thorough check-up.

Sincerely,
